8 THINGS TO KNOW

Haley quits, denies 2020 ambitions

GETTY IMAGES

The highest-profile woman in the administration will stay on for the remainder of the year.

Nikki Haley announced on Tuesday she is resigning as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, but the rising Republican star immediately denied she was preparing to challenge President Donald Trump in the 2020 presidential election.

Sitting beside Trump in the Oval Office, Haley said her 18-month stint at the United Nations had been "an honor of a lifetime" and said she would stay on until the end of the year.

A former governor of South Carolina who is the daughter of Indian immigrants, Haley is the highest-profile woman in Trump's cabinet and is often seen as a possible presidential candidate.

But she said in her resignation letter to Trump she would "surely not be a candidate for any office in 2020" and would support his re-election bid.

She told reporters in the Oval Office on Tuesday: "No, I am not running for 2020."

Haley said she did not have any future plans set and did not give a reason for quitting, but Trump said she had told him some six months ago that she was thinking of leaving by the end the year "to take a little time off."

Haley's fast rise from a Southern state's legislature to the world stage suggests the 46-year-old may have greater political ambition.

Describing her U.N. tenure as "fantastic" and "incredible," Trump was effusive in his praise for Haley. He accepted her resignation and said he would name her successor within two or three weeks.

Haley has been the face of Trump's "America First" policy at the United Nations, steering the U.S. withdrawal from several U.N. programs and ardently defending his hard-line policies against Iran and North Korea over their nuclear programs.

But Haley has also sometimes distanced herself from Trump.

"She has done an incredible job. She is a fantastic person, very importantly, but she also is somebody that gets it," Trump said on Tuesday. "She's done a fantastic job and we've done a fantastic job together."

Haley's name has come up as possible Republican running mate in the last two presidential elections and she could also become a U.S. senator if fellow South Carolina Republican Lindsey Graham takes up a job in the Trump administration, as is often speculated.

Trump suggested the two of them jointly announce Haley's departure in the Oval Office, an administration official said, noting that Haley was the only outgoing senior member of Trump's administration to be feted in this way.

Haley praised Trump and his family for their support.

She described Jared Kushner, Trump's son-in-law and aide, as "such a hidden genius that no one understands" for his work on renegotiating the NAFTA trade deal and preparing a long-awaited Middle East peace plan that has not yet been released.

Haley was seen by her counterparts at the U.N. as a voice of clarity in an administration that often gave mixed signals on foreign policy, diplomats say.

But she has been overshadowed in recent months by the appointments of Trump loyalist Mike Pompeo as secretary of state and hawk John Bolton as White House national security adviser.

Pompeo has led policy on talks with North Korea, while Bolton has taken the lead on trying to implement Trump's hard line against Iran.

Sen. Robert Menendez, the top Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called Haley's resignation "yet another sign of the Trump administration's chaotic foreign policy."

"I am deeply concerned about the leadership vacuum she leaves and the national security impact of her departure at this time of continued disarray," Menendez said.

Haley is the latest in a long line of high-profile departures from the administration, such as former secretary of state Rex Tillerson, who was fired in March, and Steve Bannon, Trump's chief strategist, who left in August 2017. REUTERS

ACTING EPA HEAD LIKED 'RACIST' OBAMA PHOTO

1 The acting head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency liked a controversial Facebook photo five years ago of then-President Barack Obama that a civil rights group has called racist, the Huffington Post reported on Tuesday. Andrew Wheeler, a longtime Washington insider, has kept a low profile compared to Scott Pruitt, who was forced to resign as head of the EPA in July under a cloud of ethics allegations including that he made staff search hotels for special skin lotion. In January 2013, when Wheeler was a lobbyist for Murray Energy, a privately owned coal company, he liked an image on Facebook of former President Barack Obama and his wife Michelle that depicted them staring at a banana, said the report, which listed other social-media activity by Wheeler that critics said was inappropriate. Heidi Beirich, the head of the intelligence project at the Southern Poverty Law Center, a civil rights group, called the image of the Obamas "blatantly racist." She said the people Wheeler interacted with "are just not folks a legitimate person should have anything to do with."

STEVIE NICKS, DEF LEPPARD EARLY FAVES FOR HOF

2 Fleetwood Mac singer Stevie Nicks and glam-metal band Def Leppard led voting among fans on Tuesday for induction into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame, outstripping the 13 other nominees eligible for a place in music history. Nicks and British band Def Leppard were among 15 acts from a wide range of styles announced as nominees, including country singer-songwriter John Prine, Chicago funk group Rufus featuring Chaka Khan and leftist rockers Rage Against the Machine. Janet Jackson, a five-time Grammy winner, will have a third chance to gain induction after failing to make it in her first two times on the ballot. Nicks, a two-time Grammy winner known for her haunting vocal style, was inducted into the Hall 20 years ago as a member of the popular 1970s group Fleetwood Mac. She is nominated this time for her solo career. The Rock & Roll Hall of Fame sends ballots to over 1,000 artists, historians and members of the music industry to select the inductees. They will be announced in December and inducted into the Hall of Fame at a ceremony in March in New York.

SWIFT HELPS BOOST VOTER REGISTRATION SIGN-UPS

3 Pop music luminary Taylor Swift's decision to wade into electoral politics for the first time on Sunday has driven a spike in online voter registration, particularly among young people, according to the website Vote.org. The nonprofit site, which helps people register online, reported more than 250,000 new registrations since Swift posted a message on Instagram endorsing two Democratic candidates in her home state of Tennessee and urging people to register. By comparison, the site recorded 57,000 new registrations in all of August and 190,000 last month. More than 60 percent of the registrations since Sunday were among voters between 18 and 29 years old, an increase the site said was likely prompted by Swift's post. "This is a pretty incredible, off-the-charts event," said Raven Brooks, the chief operating officer for Vote.org. Vote.org acknowledged it was not possible to measure the direct impact of Swift's move, but Brooks noted the surge in young voters was in line with Swift's youthful fan base. Swift's Instagram post had recommended people visit the website Vote.org.

Maura Healey is a badass, at least according to InStyle.

The Massachusetts attorney general was named by InStyle magazine one of its of 50 "badass women" who "show up, speak up and get things done."

Healey appears on the list alongside Emma Gonzalez, the Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School student who stepped up as an activist after the Parkland shooting; the women of Time's Up; Patty Jenkins, who directed "Wonder Woman"; Ruth Bader Ginsburg; Cardi B and more.

InStyle chose Healey in part because of her efforts to challenge President Donald Trump's administration more than two dozen times, suing the administration to

"Since Donald Trump took office, I've had to sue him multiple times," Healey says in a video for InStyle. "It's been really important to sue Donald Trump and his administration when they have done things that have hurt people here in this state and across the country.

"As attorney general, if I won't stand up for the Constitution and against the abuse of power, then who will?" she continues. "No one's above the law in this country, not even the president."

Healey is the nation's first openly gay state attorney. She took office as attorney general in 2015 after being considered an "underdog" as a first-time candidate while running for the position.

Before entering law, Healey played professional basketball in Austria for two years. She had played basketball through her time at Harvard, as well.

"No one's above the law in this country, not even the president."

"Basketball is really important to me," Healey says. "Basketball taught me how to be tough and taught me how to compete. Working together as a team, realizing that everybody has got something to contribute, something to give and there's a time for everybody to step up and step in. I think that as I've set up the attorney general's office that I run, I think about it like a team and I think about having a mission, having a goal and working together to make things happen."

Making a murderer: Anders Danielsen Lie on becoming Anders Breivik for '22 July'

"He is frighteningly normal in many respects."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Jon Oigarden as Geir Lippestad and Anders Danielsen Lie as Anders Behring Breivik in "22 July." ERIK AAVATSMARK / NETFLIX

Anders Danielsen Lie was always aware of the preparation and the mental toil that playing Anders Breivik, the mass murderer who killed 77 people across Oslo, Norway, in July of 2011, would require. So much so that Lie recently told Metro it took him a few weeks to agree to the part.

"It was a huge responsibility. I had to be absolute certain that I could create a character that was believable. I would never have done it if I didn't feel like I could do it," Lie said. "I knew that it was going to be a huge research job. It took me a while to reflect on how this could affect me. If I was capable of making a truthful and responsible portrait, and that was the most important thing."

Lie ultimately signed up, citing the Oscar-nominated talents of writer and director Paul Greengrass as the main reason why. But then he had to do a deep dive into the dark and murderous mind of Breivik, who is in prison in Norway, during which time his biggest take away was just how "frighteningly normal" he was.

"He is a slightly idiosyncratic character. A lot of that is in his way of talking and the words that he uses. I couldn't actually use that because we were shooting in English and a lot of it was Norwegian idiomatic. So it was hard to use that," says Lie. "He is an awkward person in many, many ways. But he is also frighteningly normal in many other respects. When you watch him in an interrogation that is perhaps the most striking feature. That he comes across as fairly normal.

"It is actually quite disturbing to watch a person, when you know what he has done, and he is so ordinary and normal. It is very disturbing," he adds. "I was trying to analyze my reaction to that. Because I think we have a tendency to mystify evil people. We want them to be monsters. We don't want them to be human beings. We don't want to be apart of us. I think that is what was going on psychologically."

Lie thought it was important to not portray him as a monster.

"I really wanted to show that he was also a human being, and a quite normal human being in many aspects," he says. "But in that sense he also has psychology traits that deeply pathological. He has a total lack of compassion and emotional empathy for the victims. He also has narcissistic traits. So he is not completely normal. But in many ways he is."

Ultimately, Lie watched most of the nearly 200 hours worth of interrogation footage between Breivik and the police after the events, all of which helped to form and build the character.

"I found out that he is quite emotionally detached," says Lie. "There was not much anger. Not much sadness. He can be joking sometimes, but there was no strong emotions."

"22 July" is on Netflix.

3 Harpoon happenings you need to know about this fall

Autumn is always a good time to enjoy a few brews, especially if you're a fan of Harpoon beers. Not only is the Boston-based brewery a great place to celebrate Oktoberfest, but it also has a number of exciting new offerings to sip this season. Here are a few new Harpoon beers you should know about this fall.

Dunkin' Coffee Porter

There are two things that Bostonians love: a great brew and a cup of Dunkin' Donuts coffee. The iconic local brands have teamed up for a new collaboration, the Dunkin' Coffee Porter.

The beer debuted during Dunktoberfest, a special Oktoberfest celebration at Harpoon, earlier this fall. According to a release, the Dunkin' Coffee Porter will be available in 12 oz. bottles, as well as on draft at selection locations around the eastern United States. The new beer features a 6 percent ABV, and is "a malty tasting brew" that has espresso and dark chocolate aromas.

"Dunkin' has been there for us since the early days when getting the brewery up and running required a lot of beer, and even more coffee," Dan Kenary, CEO and co-founder of Harpoon Brewery, said in a release. "We couldn't think of a better way to pay tribute to the company that's helped fuel our success than to create something special for our fans by combining the taste of their favorite morning brew with one of ours."

Rec. League

A light brew that doesn't taste like one, this new addition to the lineup of Harpoon beers is great for cooling down after a day of fun with friends. A hazy-style pale ale with 3.8 percent ABV, the Rec. League features a combination of hops, sea salt, buckwheat and chia. The brew is available on draft at both Harpoon breweries in New England, as well as in 16 oz. cans and on draft at select locations around Massachusetts.

Loma Brewing

While this isn't technically a new Harpoon offering, the Boston-based brewery is teaming up with the California-based brewpub Loma Brewing Company to distribute Greek God of Hops Double IPA and Appeasement IPA in Massachusetts and Rhode Island this fall. What makes this collaboration even more special is that former Red Sox star Kevin Youkilis is a co-founder of Loma.

According to a release, the Appeasement IPA has a 7 percent ABV and features modern American hops, blueberry and stone fruit hop flavors, while the Greek God of Hops is a 9 percent ABV double IPA. Both styles of beers will be available for fans to pick up in four-packs of 16 oz. cans.

"Bringing Loma Brewing Company beers to Boston has always been a dream of mine and I'm thankful to the folks at Harpoon Brewery for helping us make this happen," Youkilis said in a release. "Boston is an incredible city with a great taste for beer. I'm thrilled to bring home a taste of the Golden State to help celebrate everything this city has to offer." MATT JUUL

FANTASY ADVICE FOR NFL WEEK 6

Amari Cooper cannot be trusted. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Door open for Clement

With Jay Ajayi out for the season with a torn ACL, the Eagles will turn to a running-back-by-committee between Corey Clement, Wendell Smallwood and to some extent Darren Sproles, when he eventually gets healthy. Clement is the player to own out of that backfield, as he is the most complete back of the group, and is likely the best true runner. Darren Sproles is almost exclusively a pass-catching threat as he has been for most of his distinguished career, and Smallwood profiles more as a change-of-pace back than anything else, leaving Clement as the player with the most potential to seize a more significant role. Assuming the quad issues he's dealt with this season are behind him, he'll be in the flex conversation immediately and will have some RB2 upside if he can separate himself from the pack.

Brown the best option

John Brown's fantasy value is predicated on the fact that he is the sole target for Joe Flacco on big plays. Flacco has always had a big arm, and he's putting it to good use in the early goings of the season when targeting Brown — he is third in the NFL in yards per reception with 20.8. Simply put, Brown will continue to carry WR2 value as long as he's healthy, because he has no competition on his own team for those high-value targets. His value is slightly diminished in PPR leagues simply because those high-value targets don't come as often as balls in the slot do, but you'll trade the lower reception totals for touchdowns and yardage any day of the week. Keep firing Brown up as a top 25 option until either Flacco proves otherwise or Brown's health problems resurface — neither of which are showing any signs of occurring soon.

Cooper impossible to trust

So far in 2018, Amari Cooper has either had at least eight catches for 116 yards, or no more than two catches for 17 yards. That kind of variance makes him incredibly frustrating to own, especially since there doesn't seem to be any semblance of pattern to it. Cooper is undoubtedly talented, and is (in theory) the top wide receiver on his team, but last year's instability seems to have followed him into this season. Add in the fact that his quarterback, Derek Carr, has a similarly frustrating track record of production and Cooper simply can't be trusted in fantasy lineups as anything more than a flex option — and even then, I'd be looking for a player with a higher floor. Hope he has another good game in him this weekend, then trade him away if possible.

NFL Sleepers of the Week

Ronald Jones, RB, Tampa Bay Buccaneers – Peyton Barber proved himself woefully ineffective in the first few games this season, and in Jones' Week 4 debut he out-touched Barber. It may take a week or two before you can trust him, but Jones is a great stash for the RB-desperate right now.

Christian Kirk, WR, Arizona Cardinals – Josh Rosen is certainly showing some of the potential that made him a first-round draft pick, and his favorite weapon seems to be fellow rookie Christian Kirk. Kirk's upside is limited in that offense, but he's approaching flex value and should only improve as the season continues.

Cameron Brate, TE, Tampa Bay Buccaneers – O.J. Howard is still out with a knee injury, and the return of Jameis Winston should help Brate's prospects — he was Winston's preferred tight end target last year. He should be startable this week at least.

Aries Don't limit what you can do because of fear, or back down when someone doesn't agree with you. Compromise based on understanding and intelligence will lead to a workable solution.

Taurus Take note of what others say instead of taking offense. You'll gain greater perspective on a situation if you listen and consider what's being offered. Change will lead to personal progress.

Gemini Put your head down and keep working toward your goal. Much can be accomplished if you are less vocal and more intent on finishing what you start.

Cancer You don't have to overspend to make an impression. An innovative idea will spark interest and get others talking about partnerships and new possibilities. Romance is on the rise.

Leo An unexpected incident will leave you at odds. You can let anger take charge and make a fuss, or you can focus on how to turn things around in a positive manner.

Virgo Stop worrying and trust in your ability to get things done right and on time. Your actions will help you outmaneuver the competition, and your intelligence will help you make wise choices.

Libra You'll have a lot riding on the changes you make. Listen to suggestions and use what's offered to the best of your ability. Look for the positive in everyone and everything.

Scorpio With change comes new opportunities. Embrace what life has to offer and share your emotions with someone you care about. Positive acts will lead to personal improvements.

Sagittarius Observe what others do and listen to what they say. What you learn will give you a better idea of how to proceed. Set out on your own path and see where it leads.

Capricorn Doing things differently will bring about positive change. Your insight and experience will make others take note. An unusual offer will change the way you move forward.

Aquarius Proceed with caution. You'll come up against someone who is overpowering and intent on taking advantage of you if you let down your guard. Be strong and know when to say no.

Pisces Don't let anyone stifle who you are or how you do things. Be true to your beliefs and have the courage to follow your heart. A commitment you make will change your life. EUGENIA LAST
